

National Bar Association (NBA) Applauds Biden Administration's Nomination of Judge Ketanji Brown Jackson to Supreme Court of the United States

Washington, D.C.- February 25, 2022- Today, the American people have witnessed history as the Biden Administration has nominated the first Black woman to the Supreme Court of the United States. Despite the fact that this Nation has long been a melting pot of a myriad of cultures, our nation's highest court has historically failed to reflect the beauty of that diversity. Today's historic nomination is the first step to remedy that lack of diversity. An exceptionally qualified candidate, the National Bar Association is proud to congratulate Judge Ketanji Brown Jackson on her nomination to the Supreme Court of the United States.

"This is a monumental day not just in Black history, but American history. Speaking as both a lawyer and judge myself, I know firsthand that courtrooms benefit from juror and judicial diversity. The nomination of a Black woman to the Supreme Court of the United States is long overdue, and I applaud the Biden Administration for ending the delay in nominating a Black woman to our nation's highest court with such an exceptionally qualified candidate," Carlos Moore, NBA President.
